GUIDE TO WEARING HIGHLAND DRESS

HOSE: These must be in keeping with the Tartan worn in the Kilt and must not be too high on leg. The correct height is the width of four fingers lower than the inside bone of the knee.

SPATS: These should fit closely around the legs and top of boots or shoes and should show no wrinkles. The point at back must meet the centre of the hose-seam.

Buttons (except in case of the Gordons) shall be white.

FLASHES: The position is a matter of uniformity and no set rule can be laid down. Generally accepted that inside of front strand of braid or tartan shall be in centre or to the side, say, quarter round of leg in front.

KILT: The Kilt should be worn to give the best hang of the pleats and should hang with the bottom of the kilt level with or splitting the knee-cap. If worn correctly, by kneeling on the ground the bottom edge of kilt should just reach the ground. Care should be taken that the kilt hangs evenly all round and not up or down at front or back.

SPORRAN: The length of a dress sporran is defined by the height of the wearer. The sporran straps should fit snugly into the groin. A hair sporran should be worn level with the bottom of the kilt.

PLAID: Full plaid - the lowest point of the fringe of the piper's plaid should not reach lower than the top of the back peak of the spats. A belted plaid must not come below the kilt. Wearing the plaid too long is a prevalent mistake among bands.

GLENGARRY: The correct position on the head is right fore and aft. The fall is all to the right side, close to the right ear with the front peak just one inch above the right eyebrow.

FEATHER BONNET: All regiments wearing the feather bonnet, wear it straight on the head, but a slight cant to the right side is acceptable if uniformly worn.

SHOULDER BROOCH: Should be worn in a uniform position attached to the plaid on the left shoulder.

BELTS AND TUNICS: The buckles of sword belts all have exactly the same place on breast, with the mounts equally spaced after the belt has been adjusted to suit the wearer. Waist belts should show two buttons of tunic in small of back. All tunics should fit snugly.
